his way through the crowd to where he sat.

They greeted each other effusively, and the Concy Island magnate placed his arm affectionately around "Silver Dolfar's" need, who returned the embrace with a sympathetic handshake. After a whispered conversation McKane went over to his seat.

Ex-Judge Troy finished the cross-examination of Witness Poppel, and then Francis E. Pruzini, another of Mr. Gayanor's copyists, was called to the stand. He went down to Gravesend on Friday and Saturday afternoons and Saturday evening prior to the election. On Friday after Mr. Grout had made an unsuccessful attempt to get at the registry lists in the town hall, the witness said he was told to wait ther for an opportunity to copy the list of the Fifth District.

he was told to wait ther for an opportunity to copy the list of the Fifth District.

The witness then went on to tell of his unsuccessful visits to the houses of the inspectors of the Fifth District to get hold of their lists. He was unable to find any of them at home.

Pruzini said that he was one of the party which went on down to Coney Island on Saturday at midnight after the others had left the train at Gravesend. There were eight of them in all.

The witness said that four men got en the train at Gravesend and went on to Coney Island with them. Ex-Judge Troy wanted this testimony stricken out, and Mr. Shepard said that the prosecution proposed to show that these four men twere sent down by McKane's orders to follow the party in the train, and to take care of them after they reached Concy Island.
